Herman Melville was born on August 1, 1819, in New York City, the third child of eight children. His parents were Allan Melville and Maria Gansevoort Melville. He was an American poet, novelist, short story writer, and essayist. He is best known for his novel Moby Dick.

Melville was a product of a socially connected New York family to his socialite parents from his youth. He did not seem to fit their mold of a good god fearing noble and refined child. In 1826, Allan Melville wrote of his son, not until the early 20th century was he recognized as a literary masterwork and touted as a cornerstone of modern American literature.

Melville was interested in the sea from an early age, and his intimate working with it became a theme in his work. He was drawn to the sea, a reserved bookish and social wanderer. His work was a response to the romantic movement that dominated American literature in the mid-19th century. His work was often in a negative or ambivalent way to the romantic movement that dominated American literature in the mid-19th century.

Melville's novel Moby Dick was first recognized as a literary masterpiece and touted as a cornerstone of modern American literature. His work ended up being a response to the romantic movement that dominated American literature in the mid-19th century.
